

Water Regulation: Water Rights

Minnesota's Water Law is based on the common law doctrine of riparian rights modified by the concept of reasonable use. If you own land abutting a surface water source or overlying a ground water source you have the reasonable right to use the resource subject to the rights to other riparian landowners. Reasonable use is defined by statutes and rules that guide issuance water appropriate permits.